

February 9, 2011

Dear Tyler,

I can't tell you how grateful I am for your perseverance, your patience and your guidance. This money will mean that my mom can stay in her apartment for an additional year. I can't begin to tell you how important this is to her health and her overall well-being.

I remember when you called me over a year ago I was certain that things like this are too good to be true....and so rarely are true. Friends and family cautioned me not to trust you. To go find the money myself if it really existed. But with my dad's death still so new to all of us and the responsibilities of caring for my mom overwhelming, I knew that if this money did exist there was only one way my mom would ever see it. And that was if I trusted you.

Thank you for reminding me through your honesty and integrity that people are worthy of trust. That good things can sometimes come from places where you least expect them.

Sincerely,

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]